Last week we promised to give the 'An nual Roport, in this issue, of the General Committee of the above Institute, for the past year, which will be found bolow .-Every metaber of the Association should read it, and thereby gain an insight into the working and stability of the same :-

The General Committee of the Newmar et Mechanics' Institute, at the conclusion of heir term of office, beg to lay before the members the following report of proceedings during the post year; and in presenting this the third Annual Report, your Committee are happy in being able to congratulate the In stitution on the continued success that has attended its operations. As might naturally be expected, the continued depression in trade, from which the mercautile and manufacturing classes, and especially the laboring part of the commu nity, have suffered soverely, has had the of feet of preventing as large an increase of members as would have taken place in ordi nary times; notwithstanding this drawback; however, the net increase of membership this as compared with that of lost year, has been 39; which, under the circumstances your Committee consider is very antisfaclory, proving, as it does, the permanent in-

The Rose,

From lime immemorial, the rose seems to have been the especial floral favorite with all eastern nations. Indeed, to such an extent did the ancients carry their passion for the aspect of affairs as being so coinbra as to the rose, that no triumphal car or column was considered completely decked mithout it-no bridal, no funeral, no christening, or public ceremony was conducted, at which the rose did not appear most conspicuous in the profose array of flowers.
